THIS MERCHANTS ENDORSEMENT IS A WEIGHTY ONE

"I Recommend Nerv-Worth-as Being a Fine Medicine."

This local Nerv-Worth endorsement is worth repeating. It was given some weeks ago to Burke's Drug Store by Oliver Talkington, the well known Clarksburg merchant: "I had stomach trouble and nervous indigestion. Could not eat fresh meat without it distressing me. Some gases on my stomach which made me nervous. Poor sleeper. Jerked and started in my sleep. My sleep did me little good. Was not refreshed when I'd get up in the morning. Have taken one bottle of Nerv-Worth. I feel quite a bit better. Sleep fine. More refreshed and rested in the morning than I was ever before. I can eat meat and most anything now. My general condition is improved. I recommend Nerv-Worth as being a fine medicine."

Here are three models of the famous REZNOR Gas Heaters—the Fireplace, the Bathroom Wall Heater and the ever-popular Portable Heater.

We heartily recommend all three because all are built on the same scientifically correct principle—Reflected Heat.

Reznor Gas Heaters

are odorless, instantaneous, and do not vitiate the air. They heat the floor first and the ascending heat warms the room and aids ventilation.

The Bathroom Heater and the Fireplace are set in the wall, thus saving floor space.

REZNOR Gas Heaters maintain complete combustion of the gas and give maximum heat for gas consumed.

MRS. MELTON'S LETTER

To Tired Worn-Out Mothers

Jackson, Miss.—"I shall feel repaid for writing this letter if I can help any tired, worn-out mother or housekeeper to find health and strength as I have. I have a family of five, sew, cook and do my housework and I became very much run-down in health. A friend asked me to try Vinol. I did so and now I am well and strong and my old time energy has been restored. Vinol has no superior as a tonic for worn-out, run-down, tired mothers or housekeepers."—Mrs. J. N. ARMY PROBLEM HAS PROVED TOO BIG FOR WILSON

Inefficient in Handling Border Forces and Unable to Get Adequate Legislation.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—The operations of the regular army and the national guard on the Mexican border in the last year have demonstrated not only the woeful shortcomings of the nation's land defense but the inefficiency of the administration in managing military affairs and the inadequacy of the recent army legislation. The national guard went to the border ill equipped and practically untrained. The southern guardmen were absolutely unfit for service, according to the administration itself, which thus explained why northern regiments were sent to the front and southern regiments kept at home.

The new army legislation provides little improvement upon the old system of equipping and training the national guard, and experience already has proved that, in recruiting the strength of the citizen regiments, as well as the regular army, it is a failure.

Failure of Villa Pursuit. The inefficiency of the administration was disclosed by the pursuit of Villa. It had refused to adopt the general staff recommendation to mass troops at selected points fully equipped to pursue invaders, such as Villa's band. When the Columbus massacre took place it required a week to mass the troops and equip them in the manner previously proposed by the general staff.

The regular army had only seven motor trucks within 100 miles of Columbus. The expedition could not move until trucks had been ordered, supplied, and transported to the border, together with drivers taken from civilian life. The administration was forced to buy motor trucks in units of twenty-seven to a company. Had they been on hand at the start Villa might have been captured.

The army had only eight airplanes, every one of which escaped a few days after the first and only one squadron of the regular army had flown, ridden, or walked to join Pershing. Months were required to provide the minimum number of serviceable planes necessary to scouting, and it was the lack of such equipment which compelled Pershing to send out Boyd's scouting party, which was massacred at Carrizal.

Funston's Demand. As soon as the punitive expedition was dispatched across the border Gen. Funston informed the White House that the government must supply him with many more troops. He wanted 50,000 more if the pursuit of Villa was to be conducted seriously. If the president was ready to take on a real war Funston wanted the carefully worked out plans of the general staff to be followed. These plans called for 250,000 men.

Mr. Wilson responded by sending more regulars to the border. He stripped the whole country of its regulars. He was warned that by so doing he was taking away the only drill masters the country had, who would be sorely needed to train the national guard and volunteers.

At length the supply of regular infantry and cavalry and field artillery was exhausted. Funston made another demand for troops and urged that the guardmen be assembled for training. Mr. Wilson's response was to order the cactus country company after company of coast artillerymen.

Fort Stripped of Men. There was on file a report showing that already the ports of the country were in sorry condition for defense, the officers and men being far below the minimum requirements. The report was ignored and the depleted commands were stripped to the bone in order that more regulars might be obtained and no call to the guard issued. Men who were trained for coast defense were transformed into infantrymen and made to do border patrol work. The ports they had guarded were left almost defenseless.

The call for more and more men became insistent. The conventions came. The nominations were made and the presidential campaign was on. Two days after Mr. Wilson was reelected he ordered the most entire national guard to the border.

Rush to Answer Call. Mr. Wilson had sent to Carranza a note which amounted to an ultimatum. With full mobilization ordered the country began to believe that effective intervention was intended. Recruiting started with a rush. Men of wealth, men of big affairs, men who knew their business connections would have to suffer during their absence; men who knew they might never obtain again their places of employment and who knew that the sacrifices might mean grave trouble to them and their families, men of every sort heard the call of country and gave up business, wife, children, everything to answer that call. They soon found that they were merely to police the border indefinitely. On July 31—forty-three days after the call—by an effort which gave a genuine surprise to the regular army men, the national guard had on the border 111,257 officers and men partly trained and untrained. No other force of militia or volunteers in this coun-

And Were it Not for Election Machine Hughes Would Break the "Solid South."

(SPECIAL TO THE TELEGRAM) CHARLESTON, Oct. 18.—Emory Hilliard is a traveling salesman. His home is in South Carolina. He travels through West Virginia. His father was a Confederate soldier. "Am I going home to vote?" responded Mr. Hilliard to a query from another traveler coming to Charleston from Hinton. "Well I should say I am. I was rocked in a Democratic cradle, and never voted the Republican ticket in my life, but this time I shall vote for Judge Hughes for president. My father will vote the same way, although he fought in the Civil war against the Union. We think just as much of the stars and stripes now as you northerners do, and we do not think that it is being given proper consideration by the present administration."

Mr. Hilliard said it is his candid opinion that if it were not for the election machinery of the South Hughes would be able to break up the "Solid South" without the slightest difficulty. "You can't realize the feeling in the South against the president because of his Mexican policies. We southerners are not cowards, and while we do not want to fight, we do want our flag to be respected not only in the United States, but every place else," said he.

A poll was taken on the train, on which Mr. Hilliard was riding, by some of the traveling salesmen aboard, and Hughes received thirty-eight straw votes, while Wilson received nineteen. The vote on woman suffrage was almost two to one against the amendment. That on the candidate for governor was Robinson thirty-four, and Cornwell fourteen. A number of those voting on the presidential nominees and suffrage, declined to voice their preference for governor, or being from other states had no preference.

October Weather Is Good Underwear Weather

These cool frosty October mornings are but a foretaste of what is to come. It is high time you were preparing for the cold wintry days of December and you will no doubt need heavier underwear. Today is the time to look over your supply and lay in what you need against the morning when you wake up and find the ground white with snow. Don't put off making your purchases until you come in and find your size gone and have to take what you can get. We try so hard to keep a stock of all sizes but it is an impossibility to keep our stock up all season, as we cannot tell just how many garments we will sell, and as the mill is rushed with orders, we cannot get duplicates for many weeks. "Harvard Mills" underwear for women and children has been our standard for eighteen years. We have sold it to many, many people during all these years, and are still selling them, but we want many, many more to use this splendid line of goods. All sizes and all weights are here for your selection today, but tomorrow may find us with some sizes out and selections incomplete. Harvard Mills underwear is made from the right fabric, every garment is cut by hand from a pattern, just as the tailor cuts your clothes. Ordinary underwear is cut by electric knives from layers of cloth. This is why many kinds of underwear being sold at special sales never fit. Harvard Mills underwear fits, it does not draw over the busts, it lays down right on the back of the neck, and curves right about the shoulders and arms. A patented flatlock seam is used that lies flat so that you hardly know it is a seam. Compare it with the ordinary kind and you will see the difference straight off.
